COURSE OVERVIEW

This intensive three-day auditor training program equips participants with the practical knowledge and skills required to conduct effective, value-adding audits of Environmental and Occupational Health & Safety Management Systems. The course integrates the requirements of ISO 14001:2026 (latest edition) and ISO 45001:2018, providing a unified and modern understanding of Environmental Management Systems (EMS) and Occupational Health & Safety Management Systems (OHSMS). The updated ISO 14001 standard introduces enhanced focus on climate change, organizational context, lifecycle thinking, and strategic environmental risk management, all of which are fully embedded in this training. Participants gain a clear understanding of how management systems contribute to sustainability, resilience, and organizational performance, moving beyond compliance toward proactive environmental and safety leadership. A key component of the program is the application of ISO 19011:2026 (and latest guidance updates, where applicable) — the internationally recognized guideline for auditing management systems. Participants will learn how to plan, conduct, report, and follow up audits using a risk-based, process-oriented, and value-driven approach. Through instructor-led sessions, practical exercises, and real-world case studies, learners will develop competencies to: Audit against evolving environmental requirements (including climate-related risks and obligations) Evaluate system effectiveness and integration Drive continual improvement and stakeholder confidence The course emphasizes auditing as a strategic tool, enabling organizations to enhance environmental performance, ensure compliance, and support ESG and sustainability goals.
